

Practice Being a Beginner Lab

Week 5: Reframing Failure

This activity is about embracing your “Beginner’s Mind” by doing something without overthinking it or without worrying about how you perform.

What did you notice? Place an X in the activity box, if the statement applies to you.		Juggling	Jenga	Self-Portrait
	I was skeptical of this activity
	I rushed to complete the activity
	I compared myself (+/-) to others
	I talked negatively about myself
	I stopped participating or faked my participation
	I experienced frustration and/or anxious thoughts
	I expected it to be really easy or really hard
	I withheld my emotions (+/-) or resisted enjoyment
	I was curious about trying the activity
	I stayed engaged in the activity
	I celebrated small wins during the activity
	I celebrated others or I was happy for others’ success
	I was patient with myself and offered kindness/grace
	I asked for help or learned from others
	I tried new ways to be successful at the activity
	I allowed myself to feel and emote (+/-) and/or enjoy

Reflection:

1. Describe how this experience was for you?
2. What do you need to be comfortable with failing?
3. What was hard/uncomfortable about the activities?
4. What new skills did you learn or try?
5. What discomfort is there in not being good at something or feeling incompetent?
6. What fears came up for you?
7. What did you learn by practicing being a beginner?
8. How will you continue in your exploration of reframing failure?